ABOUT RANDY REGIER

The work of artist Randy Regier explores how the fantasies of childhood can dovetail with the anxieties of adulthood, in particular in the case of the design of toys made and sold during the Cold War period. To maximize the impact of his sculptures, Regier also develops elaborate fictions that are intended to disguise the artistry of the works themselves, so that they tend to come across to the viewer as objects retrieved from the historical past. His best-known work is probably NuPenny Toy Store, a nomadic display of seemingly vintage objects that was most recently shown at Crystal Bridges Museum in Bentonville, AK, in 2013-14.
