NEW EXHIBIT REFLECTS LEGACY OF A KC LEGEND

Going Places: The Toy Collection of Jerry Smith

September 28, 2018 (KANSAS CITY, MO) – On Saturday, October 6, 2018, The National Museum of Toys and Miniatures is opening a new exhibit: Going Places: The Toy Collection of Jerry Smith.

Jerry Smith (1917-1984) was a Kansas City auto dealer, philanthropist, and toy collector who worked tirelessly to help others. Growing up on a prairie farm, Smith was thrilled by things on the move; planes, tractors, cars, and trains sparked his imagination, and he went on to collect transportation toys by the thousands. With a goal of using his collection for good, Smith created toy displays to benefit children's charities and organizations. Today, the toys signify a journey through the technology of the last two hundred years. They also reflect the lasting legacy of a remarkable figure in Kansas City whose goal was to "give ahead, not get ahead."

For years, Smith created a Christmas Village, complete with decorated "streets" filled with old-fashioned storefronts. His collection of toys filled the streets. The entire display was free to the public but Smith encouraged donations to Children's Mercy. His collection has been displayed at the Hallmark Gallery in New York City, at the Kansas City Museum, and at other museums across the nation.

Since The National Museum of Toys and Miniatures opened in 1982, objects from Smith's collection have been displayed at the museum. Going Places showcases objects from his collection not on permanent display and brings back many old favorites beloved by generations of Kansas Citians. The exhibit runs through August 25, 2019.
